"I did say last night, in response to the inquiry of a personal friend, that I could not afford to run for Congress on the same ticket with Abram S. Hewitt."

So said Amos J. Cummings after reading a report in THE WORLD, and he added :

I am sorry that THE WORLD did not print the rest of the conversation giving my reasons for the remark. For years I was a typesetter in this city, and was and am now a member of Typographical Union No. 6. I have been a participant in many a strike, and have always taken great interest in the welfare of trades unions.

"I know that they resent Mayor Hewitt's action in raising money for a 'scab' last Summer. It was wanton and uncalled for. My blood boiled with indignation when I read his letter proposing to raise the Hartt fund.

"No man konors more than I do the members of the Workingwoman's Protective Association who refused to take any of the money thus raised, because it had been contributed for the benefit of an enemy of trade unions. They had lost their situations because of their testimony their situations because of their testimony before a Congressional investigation committee. They needed the money, but they preferred to take the chances of starvation instead of proving false to the principles of their association.

"Another thing: I do not like Mayor Hewitt's attitude on the naturalization question, nor his attempt to force cartmen and truck drivers to keep their carts and trucks, when not in use, off the streets at night.

"Above all I dadn't like his refusal to review the St. Patrick's Day procession. He found time to go up to the Metropolitan Opera-House and sit on the platform with Erastus Wiman and participate in the ceremonies attending the Queen's jubilee. Union Square is only haif way from the City Hall to the Metropolitan Opera-House, and he could not find time to appear there and review a procession on St. Patrick's Day.

"He may be an American, but it seems to me no true American will ever honor England at the expense of Ireland.

NO ONE WILL SHOULDER IT.

Shifting the Responsibility for the Decapi-Father Abram has called off his dogs.

A wholesale decapitation of Tammany's adherents in the city departments controlled by the County Democracy was begun yester. day in the Department of Public works.

The news got to the ears of Mayor Hewitt last evening and he was wroth. Hence his peremptory order to Gen. Newton, calling a halt in the decapitation of Tammany Hall men in his department.

Twelve Grant men lost their heads in the Public Works Department yesterday. Nine of them were laborers.

The other three were Cornelius W. Campbell, janitor of Jefferson Market Court building, and John White and Daniel F. Mc-Carthy, foremen in the sewer department.
These men were succeeded by James F.
Kelly, Terrance Reilly and Daniel Murphy respectively, the men who held the positions prior to the appointment of the deposed Tammanyites.

here existed no valid reason for their dismissal."

'What do you consider a valid reason?"
THE EVENING WORLD reporter asked.

"Well, I won't allow any offensive partisanship in the Department. If these men have been shouting their political preferences about the streets and raising a disturbance, I consider that sufficient reason. I am now considering the question of reinstating the men removed yesterday."

The general opinion among the Tammany men questioned with reference to the action of the Department of Public Works was that Boss Power is the sole judge as to what constitutes offensive partisanship in Public Works employees and that affiliation with Tammany is sufficient.

The Identity of Flaccomio's Murderer Remains Uncertain.

Capt. McCullagh Yet Believes in the Dinner-Party Clue.

A Vendetta Story That Is Being Traced for Possible Results.

The mystery which surrounds the death of Antonio Flaccomio, the Italian who was murdered in front of Cooper Union last Sunday evening, is thicker than ever. Not only are the detectives of Capt. Mccullagh's precinct doing their best to shed some light upon it, but Inspector Byrnes's staff has been pressed into the service.

Detective Sergt. Perazzo is engaged in working up the theory that the death of Flaccomio may be the end of a long-waged vendetta, and that the murderer may be Ramon Farach, once a Brooklyn photographer, whose brother was slain, some four years ago, by that same Flaccomic, in a duel on Staten Island over a woman. Farach was instrumental in bringing Flaccomio before the authorities of the law, but he was acquitted of here to-day over another series of burglaries the charge, and Farach swore eternal venthorities of the law, but he was acquitted of the charge, and Farach swors eternal vengeance against the murderer of his brother Carmilio in the presence of many persons.

Detectives Roth and Bissert, of the Fourteenth Precinct, together with Capt. McCullagh himself, are busy in the case to-day. It has created an intense excitement in the Italian quarter of that part of the town where all the parties connected with the case were well known. From the waiter, Scheggi, it has been learned that there were seven people in the little party at the Italian restaurant. "La Trinacria," in St. Mark's place, last Sunday night, when Flaccomio was last seen alive. Three of these persons have been placed under arrest. They are Giuseppe Canizzaro, the cook; Natale Sabatino, his partner and part proprietor of the restaurant, and F. Aita, the manager of the little feather duster store at 118 Third avenue. They have all admitted that they were together that evening drinking wine with Flaccomio.

The detectives say that they have the names of the three other persons who completed the circle around the table, and that they are only waiting to arrest them all before they proceed with the case before they proceed with the case before the Coroner. Thus far they have been unsuccessful in their search, for all of the parties have kept themselves concealed somewhere, and their acquaintances. with fore the Coroner. Thus far they have been unsuccessful in their search, for all of the parties have kept themselves concealed somewhere, and their acquaintances, with the characteristic reticence of the Italians, will give the police no information whatever about them. As their homes are known, however, it is only a question of time when they will be captured.

It is Capt. McCullagh's theory that one of that party is the murderer of Antonio Flaccomio, and he insists that he is going to prove it in the end. At present the suspicions are strongest against Sabatino, on account of the contradictions of which he was guilty in his first testimony.

The theory that the Italian, Vincenzo Carosella, who was found dead yesterday in a room in the New England Hotel, at 30 Bowery, is in any way connected with the case is room in the New England Hotel, at 30 Bow-ery, is in any way connected with the case is not entertained by the police. At least, they say that he was not one of the party at "La Trinacria" on Sunday night, and does not appear to have been known by any of those arrested.

Cantoni & Co., the Italian bankers, of 25 Wall street, whose deposit receipts for $400 were found upon the person of Carosella, would say mything whatever about their were found upon the person of Carosella, would say nothing whatever about their client, and declined to tell whether or not such a person had any account with them.

There is a feature of the case, however, which the police seem thus far to have overlooked, and it is one which adds further mystery to the affair. This is the relations which Flaccomic sustained to a certain Stefano Bono, a very suspicious character, who lately had been seen repeatedly in Flaccomic's company.

a certain Strano Bono, a very suspicious character, who lately had been seen repeatedly in Flaccomio's company.

It was ascertained by an Evenino World reporter that this Bono was two years ago convicted of "shoving the queer," and passed a certain time in the pentientiary.

Within the past two or three months he has been seen hanging about the grocery store of which Flaccomio was manager, at 607 Third avenue, and holding consultations with Flaccomio at all hours.

During the summer and up to Oct. 1 it was learned that Bono had kept a barber shop at 223 East Twenty-second street. At the latter date he disappeared mysteriously and has not been seen in that neighborhood since. Policeman Murphy, of the Eighteenth Precinct, knew him well and often got shaved there. He regarded him as a suspicious character, there. He regarded him as a suspicious character. Bono's meetings with Flaccomio had been Bono's meetings with Flaccomio had been more frequent than ever during the last two or three weeks before his disappearance, and Thomas Boylston, a young man employed in the undertaking shop at 609 Third avenue, and John McCarthy, of 336 East Forty-third treet, have observed him repeatedly in Flaccomio's shop. Only a short time ago they had a violent quarrel late in the night, and Bono went away apparently in a great rage. It is said that Bono was one of the party which drank wine in "La Trinaeria" on Sunday night, but the police refused to say whether this was true or not, say whether this was true or not Detective Bissert said this morning that he remembered the arrest of Bono for counterfeiting, and before Aita was taken down to the Coroner's office he questioned him regarding his knowledge of Bono. The prisoner, however, refused to say anything at all about that mysterious personage.

prisoner, however, refused to say anything at all about that mysterious personage.

The body of the murdered man still lay in Anton Palmer's undertaking shop at 127 East Fourth street this morning. Flaccomio had plenty of money to pay his funeral expenses, so his brother-in-law, Giuseppe Agillo, who is superintending his burnal will not have to pay out anything. He does not seem to have had very friendly feelings for his deceased relative. The body will be removed from the undertaker's this afternoon, and it is understood that grangements have been

The new prisoner, F. Aita, who was arrested last evening at the feather store in Third avenue, was taken before the Coroner this morning and examined as to his knowledge of the case. He was far from being a straightforward witness and seemed to be holding his knowledge back.

The story that was finally gotten out of him was very different from the one told by Scheggi and Canizarro, as well as that of detta theory of the murder of Flaccomio, was found by an Evening World reporter this afternoon.

He is at 31 Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn, but his sign and business cards bear the name "John Farach."

He is a tall, thin man, fifty-four years of age, and although he speaks English with the peculiarities of the Italian, he is gentle and almost refined.

He said that the people about him had always called him John, but his "private" name was Raimon.

'1 ou have seen the reports in the morning papers that you were suspected of killing Flaccomio for revenge?" asked the reporter.

The old gentleman's eyes twinkled through a pair of huge spectacles, and he stroked his long gray side whiskers amusedly.

"Yes," he said, "or—that is, my daughter is just reading the story to me."

He called the attention of the reporter to a beautiful young woman of the Italian type, plump, clear-skinned and wide-eyed, with tresses as black as the raven. She laughed and displayed a set of perfect teeth.

"We were laughing at the story," she explained, with a little blush.

"Then, it is not true?" said the reporter.

"Oh my, no! Papa was here Sunday night with uncle and brother and the rest of us. Uncle Salvatore or Charlle, as you please, and my brother Raimon, or John, as he is called."

To the reporter's request to tell the story of the vendetta the photographer smiled and said:

It Is Again Adjourned After Two Witnesses Testify. The will of Patrick Trenor, the former manufacturer of cordials at 55 Vesey street, which was drawn up Nov. 24, 1887, came up to-day in the Surrogate's Court.

P. Stover, as sole legatee. Mr. Trenor was eighty years old, and lived with a negro servant in the rear of his store till Mrs. Stover and Mrs. Noah T. Clark, who are sisters, and claim to be daughters of an old friend of Trenor, took him to their flat, 162 East One Hundred and Fourth street, where the old gentleman died, Feb. 4, of the where the old gentleman died, Feb. 4, of the present year.

Trenor was a widower and had no nearer kin than three nieces and a nephew in Ireland: Mrs. Rose Carley, Catherine McCarron, Margaret Mullaiy and James McNeill. These relatives claimed at first that the will was a forgery, but to-day, in court, the fact of the will being duly established was the point contested.

of the will being duly established was the point contested.

Henry Meyer testified that William Clark called himself and his wife to the upper room, where Mr. Trenor was sitting, and shoved them a document, which Mr. Trenor said he wanted them to sign. Mr. Clark read the document to Mr. Trenor and asked the document to Mr. Trenor and asked him if it was his last will and testament. Trenor said it was. Mr. Clark then took a pen, pointed to the name, "P. Trenor," on the document and asked Mr. Trenor if that signature was his. Mr. Trenor said it was. Mrs. Moyer's testimony was slightly at variance with her husband's. She said Mr. Stover called them upstairs and that she had not seen Mr. Clark that morning.

The Surrogate adjourned the case till tomorrow at 3 o'clock, after hearing these witnesses.

DOES HE INHERIT PROM BOTH FATHERS ? A Novel Question to Be Decided by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. (SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.) Boston, Oct 16,-The legal representatives of the estate of Irving G. Curtis, of Boston, as to snare of inheritance of an adopted son of the said Curtis, which came up before Justice Field in the Equity session of the Supreme Court to-day, presented a peculiar and novel question.

It appears that Mr Curtis, who left some $50,000, previous to his death legally adopted a child of his son, the son having died before the testator. There are five heirs and the dopted son.

Counsel for the adopted son claim that he Counsel for the adopted son claim that he inherits, not only from his adopted parent, but also from his natural parent, which would give him a double portion of his grand-tather's estate. Counsel for the other heirs contend that he can only inherit equally with the rest.

Justice Field was of opinion that the adopted son only took one share.

The Exiled Boy Safely Domiciled with His Rochester Uncle.

JOSIE IS AT HOME.

There Was a Scene to Start Tears When He Came.

Warm Hearts, New Clothes and a Rouse ing Welcome for the Boy.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 16.-Little Josie Shephard has reached his new home.

In company with an agent of the New York Juvenile Asylum he has just reached this city from the West, and was taken by the agent at once to the residence of the waiting uncle, John Shephard, jr., at 838 North Clinton street, where a scene ensued that might have brought tears to the eyes of many man of the world.

There has been quite a delay in the matter. owing to the necessity for formal proceedings, after the decision of the Indenturing Committee was reached; but now it is all over and the great work of the exile's restoration has been accomplished. Ever since THE EVENING WORLD took up the little fellow's cause Josie's uncle and aunt have anxiously watched for his coming and have eagerly listened to all the information given them about him. As the days passed on, however, and the demands of the Indenturing Committee became more and more severe, their hopes lessened and for a week before the Committee announced its decision they had about given up all hope of decision they had about given up all hope of seeing the orpina child.

When the good news of final success was made known to their they immediately began preparations to welcome the boy, and have impatiently awaited his coming.

Several days before he reached this city Mrs. Shephard said to the writer: "I am so afraid they will change their minds and not let us have Josie. I have made a new cap for him and one for Willie [their adopted child], and we have everything ready. Are you sure they will pring him?"

This will give an idea of the warm welcome Josio received.

This will give an idea of the warm welcome Josie received.

Now Josie is at home and apparently as happy and contented as an eight-year-old youngster can be. He has his new cap and new suit of clothes, and is to begin going to school in about a week. At first he was very any and would only go to his uncle. Now he calls his new parents "papa" and "mamma" and is as lively and frisky as a kitten. He does not seem to remember much about the and is as lively and frisky as a kitten. He does not seem to remember much about t e place to which he was sent in Illinois, except that he says he couldn't play any there.

Even in the short time that he has been in his new home Josie has become greatly attached to his little adopted brother, who is three years younger than he, and seems to think that he must take care of him.

This little waif, though eight years of age, has evidently never been to school and can hardly say his A B C's, but he is naturally a bright boy and has had his wits sharpened, perhaps too much, by hard experience.

He seems to be perfectly healthy, save for his lungs. He inherits weak lungs from his parents, but his new father and mother hope by proper care to overcome that weakness.

His appetite is excellent and astonishes his parents, who are only too pleased to see how quickly he has accustomed himself to his new home.

Yes, it is a happy family which now dwells in the pretty little cottage on North Clinton street. To be sure the house is not luxuriously furnished, and one of the rooms hus no carpet, but it is home to the father, mother and their two children, who nightly assemble under its roof, and could the members of The Evening World staff, who have worked so hard to place Josie where he properly belonged, see this family circle as the writer saw it, they would feel that they had indeed been laboring in a good cause.

Said Mr. Shephard: "I shall never forget what The Evening World has done for me, and I hope that it may live long and do many others who are in trouble as much good."
